organised an awareness festival in March and laid the foundation for their tradition of healthy discussion. The chief guest at the event was Santosh Yadav – the first woman in the world to climb Mt. Everest twice and also a Padmashree awardee. In her inspiring speech, she laid emphasis on the fact that the actual sense of equality can be instilled in women only when it starts from the home itself. Other influential speakers

All of us come from diverse backgrounds. However, irrespective of our cultures and societies isn't everyone here either Aam Sahi or the striker playing with the balls of patriarchy? Every one of us breathes in the air of Androcentrism—the system that positions males in the centre of the universe, sidelining their female counterparts. Our behaviour, our thoughts, and our mindsets – all of them are patriarchal in every possible manner. Be it our disposition to restrict daughters in the name of protectiveness or circumscribing limits for the genders, expecting a particular behaviour from them by defining what's acceptable and what's not—our minds are confined in staunch walls of orthodoxy and we are centuries behind our time.

Womenite was conceived amidst this silent yet swift connection. The core belief of this organization consisting of young people is that a healthy society can sustain only when all its entities, i.e., all the genders have equal rights and equal footing. As women seem to be the most marginalised, if we do not segment the society into communities, it's an essential need for all of us that they get what they deserve and hence equality is essential for a healthy society.

Womenite, a non-profit organisation was founded by Harshit Gupta, a student of NSIT, Delhi. "My mom and all the women who are around me are my inspiration and when I thought about the pains that they take for their family and still starve for respect and love, I thought to start something like Womenite," he said. The members of Womenite are mostly students who come from different colleges and have the same passion to work for equal rights for women. They are constantly involved in campaigns and workshops to spread awareness and teach young minds what their course books do not teach. As a bid to spread their voice even further, Womenite also such as Sandeep Maini – mentor and serial entrepreneur, Rushbun Gupta – founder of Zipout and Raghavendran – poet and activist were also present.

Womenite has also campaigned multiple times at Rajnigiri, has conducted workshops in numerous schools in Delhi too and have spread awareness among the children regarding child sexual abuse.

This does not put an end to the endeavours of Womenite. In fact, currently a new story is being woven on its tapestry which will be exhibited in October. It is working on the breast cancer awareness programme that will be put into action next month. As the stigma that is associated with the breast cancer is fed by the ignorance of the people, Womenite team will go to colleges along with the doctors and the breast cancer survivors to spread awareness among the youth.

These people have been working against a backdrop that is really bleak, considering the apparent position of women in society. Despite that, they are working relentlessly to turn their dream of an equal and a beautiful society into reality.
